

Special Topics Course Descriptions Winter 2022

Undergraduate

SO 299 Sociology of Media

This course examines the mass media as a social institution. In recent years, sociologists have studied significant changes in public policy that regulates the mass media, concentration of ownership of traditional mass media, and technological innovations that have given rise to new forms of mass media. Using books, videos, articles and class projects, we will seek to understand these changes and how they effect various groups in US society.

VP-410 Thea Des/Prod Pri/Sec Sch

This is a course for to assist the secondary and primary educators that are are planning theatrical performances in their schools. It is meant for the educator that need a creative spark for the theatrical design and construction of their current or future production. Course is Asynchronous and instructor will consult one on one with students.